Again he smoked a double dose and sat at his table, pen in hand, to note its effect. This time he lost all conception of time and chose to open the door; this seemed a million years. He went to pacify an angry dog, and endless ages seemed to have gone on his return. Conceptions of space retained their normal character. He felt an unusual fullness of mental impressions—enough to fill a volume of the most clairvoyant, hypnotist and all else. He was not one man or two, but several men living at the same time in different places with different occupations. He could not write one word without hurrying to the next, his thoughts hurrying to the next, his words hurrying to the next. The words he did write meant nothing. This experience admirably illustrates the close relationship between states of reality and transitory affections induced by psychic poisons.—[Science.

An Interesting Account of the Origin of These Titles.

In earlier times the ordinary man was simply William or John; that is to say, he had merely a Christian name without any kind of "handle" before it or surname after it. Some means of distinguishing one John or one William from another John or another William became necessary.

Nicknames derived from a man's trade or his dwelling place, or from some personal peculiarity, were tacked on to these simple names, and plain John became John Smith.

As yet there were no "mistress" in beland. Some John Smith accumulated more wealth than the bulk of his fellows—became, perhaps, a landed proprietor, and he became Maistre Smith. Then he began to be called in the Norman French of the day the “maistre” of this place or that, of these workmen or of those.

In time the “maistre” or “maister,” as it soon became, got facked on before him and he became Maister Smith, and his wife was Maistress Smith. But gradually the sense of possession was lost sight of and the title was conferred upon any kind, by mere possession of wealth or by holding some position of power or less consideration and importance.

It is only within comparatively modern times that the term came to be considered an almost indispensable adjunct

On every one's name when mentioned in ordinary conversation or writing, Maister Smith soon became Mistress Smith. Exactly how and when the term got corrupted cannot be said. Maister Smith, however, remained Maister Smith long after his wife became Mistress Smith.—[Oldham Chronicle.

eccentric behavior. The Judge, "I never knew that any one could become really intoxicated from drinking tea."

"No more they can, yer honor," was the reply. "We ate it."

It is becoming quite a popular vice in Boston and presumably elsewhere—this is the tea-drinking curiosity enough, if the victims are mostly found among the "help," who, having the household tea-daily always accessible, got accustomed to helping themselves from it, a pinch at a time, of the dry leaves.

It is a habit of extracting the alkaloid, which is a toxic agent of a most powerful description. Its first effects is an agreeable exhilaration. Ultimately it produces sleeplessness and an abnormal condition of mind, with strange wishes and delirium.

It is a mind-acting drug, by the way, the when tea was first brought to England, about the year 1805, it was served experimentally for eating, in a bowl, like spinach. For a long time after that it was regarded as a deadly drug, and people who sold it were considered disgraceful.

"I hope, my son," said a kind mother "that you have not fallen in love with Miss Sylph just because she has a pretty figure."

"No, indeed, mother," he replied. "The only pretty figure that has influenced me is the one our father has."

PEERLESS DYES Are the BEST.
Should Be Everywhere.

As a result of his experience with Transitory Affections Produced by Psychic Poisons, the author has recently counted a series of cases under the influence of hashish. He smoked the hashish and felt a profound sense of well-being, and then put the pipe aside. After five minutes he seemed to become two persons; he was conscious of his real self feeling a strange, and of a vast field within his double self in which a building made of gold and marbles, splendidly brilliant and beautiful beyond description, was visible.

He felt an extreme gratification and believed himself in Heaven. This double self, however, was not a hallucination, but appeared in a few minutes. His real self was undergoing rhythmical spasms throughout his body; the double was a exquisite sweetness and perfect rhythm, and a slight, almost imperceptible, modulation. Upon another occasion sleep and waking came so rapidly that they seemed to be confused. His double seemed to be a sea, bright and tossing as the wind blew; then a contented.

Again he smothered a double, and, as he lay in his hand to note its effect, This time he lost all conception of time. He arose to open the door; there seemed a millions years. He went peacefully an angry god, and endless ages seemed to have gone on his return. He felt a normal character. He felt an unusual fullness of mental impressions—enough to fill volumes. He understood clairvoyance, hypnotism and all else. He was not one man or two, but several could not write one word without hurrying to the next, his thoughts flowing with enormous rapidity. The few words he did write meant nothing. This experience admirably illustrates the close relationship between the states of mind and the states of affairs, and the continuity and transitory affections induced by psychic poisons. —[Science.]

Master Smith long after his wife became Mistress Smith.—(Oldham Chronicle.)

Two servants who were hauled up before a police justice here the other day charged with creating a rumpus, says a Boston special, indignantly denied they had been drunk. They said that they had been somewhat under the influence of tea, which was responsible for their eccentric behavior.

"But," remarked the Judge, "I never knew that any one could become really intoxicated from drinking tea."

"Yes, your honor," was the reply. "We ate it."

It is becoming quite a popular vice in Boston and presumably elsewhere—the tea eating. And, curiously enough, its victims are mostly found among the householders of the household. They are usually always accessible, get accustomed to helping themselves from it, pinch a
